Ways of Something, Episodes 1 and 2

(Lorna Mills, 2014-15, multiple directors, multiple countries, HD video, ca 60 min.)

Ways of Something, is a contemporary remake of John Berger's BBC documentary, Ways of Seeing (1972). Commissioned by The One Minutes, at the Sandberg Instituut in Amsterdam and compiled by Lorna Mills, the project consists of one-minute videos by fifty eight web-based artists who commonly work with 3D rendering, gifs, film remix, webcam performances, and websites to describe the cacophonous conditions of artmaking after the internet.

Featuring formal, figural and kitsch practices to videomaking, Ways of Something is constituted by aesthetically diverse interpretations of Berger's ideas on looking at art after the introduction of digital media and the internet. Ultimately, it turns the highbrow nature of the original documentary film into an exuberant and disjointed series on how artists understand art today. Episodes 3 and 4 consider the ways art is used to express status and its role in the aspirational world-making of advertising.
